Yesterday, more than 90,000 pages of information related to operations and events in Afghanistan and Pakistan were posted on Wikileaks. Many articles about information in those documents have been written by most major news outlets and more will likely come over the next days and weeks. The bloggers, too, are repeating information from those documents. Many of the pages are classified and many that aren't classified contain sensitive information and all were improperly provided to Wikileaks. While I believe it important that you be aware of events in the news, I caution you against commenting publicly on the information in the leaked documents as they may be classified or sensitive. Should you be asked for your comments on information in these documents, you should decline to discuss them with individuals not properly cleared for classified information. You should also refrain from discussion of these documents on the internet and I discourage you from downloading them from Wikileaks on your home computers as the information may be classified. We all have a responsibility to protect classified and other sensitive information and I count on you to do the right thing.
