Ah, I see. Thank you for explaining. Actually I happened to be talking with (b)(3):50 USC 3024(i) today; they are following the various variants, especially a few higher-frequency mutations that might possibly influence functional characteristics. Amazing that this can be tracked in close to real-time.

Thank you for the collaboration. Please let us know if we can do anything to support you all.

(U) Different species of coronavirus also are sometimes referred to as "strains". There are four other endemic human coronaviruses, which typically cause nothing worse than the common cold, and it is possible for a patient to be infected with the COVID-19 virus and one of these other coronaviruses. In a recent US study, 4% of 116 COVID-19 patients also were infected with another coronavirus at the same time.
